So when I began my search for a Car Detailing Course, I did what most people would do.

I opened 10 browser windows.

There was one course that offered certification.

Yet another one offered expert trainers.

One said that in a few days I was an "industry expert."

Then after reading all of this, I am more confused than I was to begin with.

I didn't get the answers to the questions I was asking.

Not:

How many days is the course?

What is the price?

But questions like:

Will I be able to feel like I am confident enough to work on someone's car?

Will I be able to earn from this skill?

What will happen if I make mistakes?

If you are looking for a Car Detailing Course at the moment, this blog is for you.

The First Thing You Need to Understand

Not all car detailing courses can instantly make you an expert in car detailing.

Well, that's a good thing.

Detailing is not a memorization process.

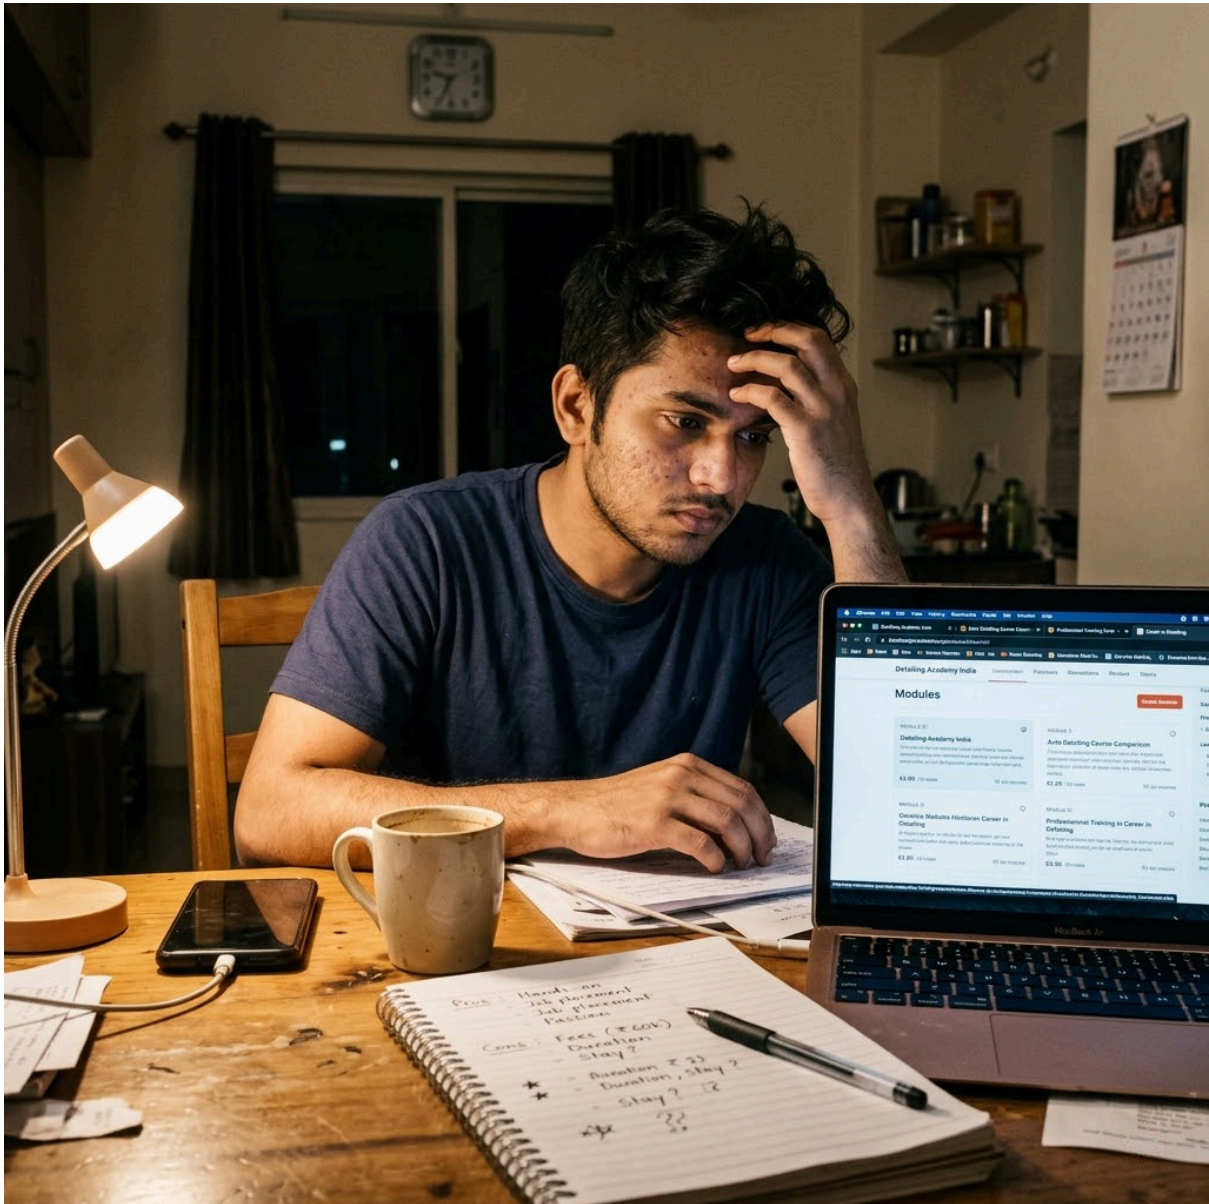

It's a matter of cultivating an eye.

An experienced detailer can tell from the car that:

- Spots water that others won't see.
- The swirls are concealed under the lights in the showroom.
- Interior wear that requires more special treatment.
- Paint problems that are not severe enough to correct vigorously.

This awareness is developed during training and repetition.

The courses that look best on paper aren't always the best.

This was one thing I learned the most.

Theory is a major part of some courses.

Others 'run through' the practical sessions.

However, at the end, ask yourself:

Could I work on my own vehicle?

If not, there is a missing component that needs to be addressed.

The best Car Detailing Course provides sufficient hands-on experience for making mistakes, asking questions and learning with no fear.

The question that no one asks: Do I enjoy the process?

Detailing isn't all pretty and glamorous.

You'll spend time:

- Inspecting tiny imperfections.
- Repeating techniques.
- Cleaning difficult areas.
- Correcting small mistakes.

The oddest thing is that those who appreciate the details tend to be the most successful.

Consumers are sensitive to care.

They notice patience.

They are aware of pride in craftsmanship.

The actual value of a car Detailing Course

It's not a certificate.

It's not the pictures.

It's not even the machines.

The true worth is to lead with confidence.

The confidence to:

- Use a machine polisher for the first time.
- Describe services to clients.
- Suggest the appropriate answer.
- Deliver results responsibly.
- Action arises out of confidence.

What I Wish Someone Had Told Me Earlier

It's not necessary to know all the things before you start.

You don't need to be a "car guy."

No years of experience necessary.

Simply a desire to learn is necessary.

The answer is yes, as did every professional detailer that has ever walked in your shoes, asking if they could do it.

The information you need, but which no one wants to tell you.

Will I look foolish if I don't know an answer?

No. The majority of students begin at a beginner level.

What if they're afraid of harming a vehicle?

Careful professionals are often caused by healthy fear. Training gives you the ability to work safely.

Is it necessary to have costly equipment after I get trained?

Not immediately. At first, skill isn't better than equipment.

Would detailing be a fulfilling career?

If you like what you see and work with accuracy, you should certainly do it!

Is it possible to get all the information in 1 course?

You will learn about the base. It's the practice that follows that leads to mastery.

Can I get customers with certification?

Certification helps. Great trust and quality attract customers.

Final Thoughts

So, what I learnt after all the searching, comparing and doubts:

Selecting a Car Detailing Course is not all about locating the "perfect" course.

It's all about courage to start.

You will either be wondering whether or not you should have learnt detailing six months down the road...

Or you'll be thankful you finally made the first move.
